

I enjoyed writing about the Students of India Association for my University Communities project. There is so much to gain by becoming a member, and I feel that I did a good job of outlining those benefits. I also felt that I did a better job at creating a catchy opening with this project. I was frustrated with my thesis statement, though. I just couldn't seem to pack all that I wanted to say in one sentence, so I'm not sure if you can tell which sentence is my thesis statement.

Also, my paragraph about the Bhangra dance event was very long because I was excited about it, but my background information paragraph is too short. I wanted to show that the SIA is a vital campus community, but I'm a little worried that I made it sound like it's all just fun and games. I also would like to know if my conclusion sounds too much like I am just repeating the opening paragraph.